POPULATION CONCENTRATIONS IN THE SOVIET UNION

A total of 299 cities in the Soviet Union have 50,000 or more inhabitants each. An estimated 69,189,000 persons, or 33 percent of the total population of the Soviet Union (206.8 million), live in and around these cities* -- that is, within a 10-mile radius of their centers. The regional pattern of these population concentrations is shown on Map No. ___, following page ___, which shows the distribution of urban centers in the Soviet Union.

The densest urban concentration is in Moskovskaya Oblast', where an estimated 77 percent of the total population lives in and around cities. This oblast' also contains more cities than any other second-order administrative division (Oblast', Kray, ASSR) in the Soviet Union. The oblast' that ranks second is in the Ukrainskaya SSR -- Stalinskaya Oblast', which covers the central and western portions of the highly industrialized Donets Basin. Here 76 percent of the inhabitants live in and around cities. Eight other political divisions now have 50 percent or more of the total population concentrated in and around cities -- Kemerovskaya Oblast' with 61 percent, Chelyabinskaya Oblast' with 54 percent, Tashkentskaya Oblast' with 53 percent, Dnepropetrovskaya Oblast' and Kuybyshevskaya Oblast' each have 52 percent, Alma-Atinskaya Oblast' and Karagandinskaya Oblast' have 51 percent, and finally, Adzharskaya ASSR has 50 percent. In other second-order divisions the percentages of urban population range from 49 percent to zero; several divisions have no urban centers as large as 50,000 inhabitants.

*For purposes of this study the word "city" means an urban center of 50,000 or more inhabitants.

This map, CIA Map No. 27740.1, should be revised by the Cartography Division before being published in this report.

The Census of Population of 1959 gives a basis for comparison of ethnic composition of each of the Union Republics with the data given in the Census of Population of 1939 as shown by the following table.

Ethnic Groups in the USSR

* Not included in 1939 Census; figures obtained from other sources.

 The RSFSR in the 1959 Census includes the former Karelo-Finskaya SSR, listed separately in the 1939 Census.

An extensive redistribution and mixing of ethnic groups has occurred since 1939. The changes of greatest magnitude have taken place in large cities, which have experienced a heavy influx of Russian industrial and administrative workers. The 1939 Census, which was compiled at the time when the proportion of urban dwellers was lower, in many cases now may be more representative of the ethnic composition in areas outside cities than are the 1959 figures.

In Kazakhkaya SSR, according to the 1959 Census, the proportion of Russians is considerably greater than that of the titular ethnic group, the Russians representing 43.1 percent of the total population compared with 29.6 for the Kazakhs. Russians also comprise significant sectors of the population of the other Republics -- 27 percent in Latviyskaya SSR, 9 percent in Belorusskaya SSR, 18 percent in Ukrainskaya SSR, 22 percent in Estoneskaya SSR, and 30 percent in Kirgizskaya SSR. Significant minority groups are present in several of the western-border Republics of the USSR. In Belorusskaya SSR 6.7 percent of the people are Poles, 1.9 percent are Ukrainians, and another 1.9 percent are Jews. Poles also comprise 8.5 percent of the population of Litovskaya SSR, Belorussians another 1.1 percent, and Jews and Ukrainians each less than 1 percent. In Moldavskaya SSR Ukrainians make up 14.6 percent of the population; Gagauzy and Jews each make up another 3.3 percent, and Bulgars make up 2.1 percent.

Most of the people of the various ethnic groups understand the language of their own ethnic group, and many of them also understand and use Russian, because study of the Russian language is compulsory in all Soviet schools.

The following table gives population data for all the cities in the Soviet Union with populations of more than 50,000. Each city is listed under the first- or second-order administrative division in which it is located. Column one of the table shows the total population of (1) the Republic, (2) Oblast', Kray, or ASSR, and (3) City. The figures in this column are from the 1959 Census and were published in a statistical summary by the Soviet Government. Column two gives the total number of inhabitants living within cities for each of the administrative units. Column three presents estimates of the total number of inhabitants living in and around cities; that is, within a 10-mile radius of the center of each. The figures in column three are estimates based on very general information, such as election district data at the All-Union level and settlement patterns shown on Oblast' maps, and should be so regarded. Column four shows the percentage of the population of each administrative unit that lives in and around cities.
